2. BACKGROUND INFORMATION

- 2.1. The Industrial Development Corporation of South Africa Limited (the IDC) is a self-financing, state-owned National Development Finance Institution which provides financing to entrepreneurs engaged in competitive industries and follows normal company policies and procedures in its operations.

The IDC, on behalf of the dtic, submitted a proposal to the Presidential Employment Stimulus for the creation of a Social Employment Fund (SEF), aimed at creating 50 000 employment opportunities in the Social and Solidarity Economy (SSE) to support a strategy of social employment in communities. The “Social and Solidarity Economy” is motivated by concern for public good, providing solutions to challenging and pervasive social and environmental challenges. The vision of the SEF is for such work to contribute to local social entrepreneurship in both direct and indirect ways. This intervention will strengthen the SSE contributing to a growth strategy that is inclusive.

A total of R3.5bn has been allocated to the SEF for the operation of the programme up until March 2025. These funds are allocated to Strategic Implementing Partners (SIPs) through a series of calls for proposals. The IDC in their capacity as a Fund Manager, has thus far appointed 37 SIPs for the creation and sustainment of the initial 50 000 employment opportunities. These SIPs work in a multitude of sectors not limited to Food Security, Education, Greening and the Environment, Health and Care, Arts and Culture etc. These worksites are disbursed throughout the country in rural, peri-urban and urban settings. SIPs have designed work programmes for the 50 000 participants and report back on their impact and output to the IDC.

The IDC are also acting as pay agent to the SIPs. In this capacity, the IDC have deployed a payment tool (Kwantu) to onboard, record time and attendance and pay participants directly. The Kwantu Tool is also being used to track participant and output data. Refer to Annexure A.

For further information on the Terms of Reference on the 2nd open call, please refer to www.idc.co.za/SEF

3. SCOPE OF WORK

The objective of the Impact assessment study is to:

- Assess dimensions of impact from the implementation of the SEF programme in respect of both successes and challenges;
- To outline/define key indicators with metrics that the IDC can utilise to measure, track, and report on the impact of the SEF Programme.

3.1 The deliverables of the Impact Evaluation study are as follows:

Effectiveness and efficiency:

This will focus on a desktop review and analysis of critical metrics and outcomes derived from the reporting system and other administrative data sources in IDC

Programme impacts in relation to the following focus areas:

- Participants
- Social, Economic and/or Environmental value creation in communities
- Organisational development in SIPs and partner organisations.

Review of design features and institutional arrangements:

This will consider how key design features of the programme have enhanced or hindered the achievement of actual and/or intended impacts.

3.2 Terms of Reference

3.2.1 Effectiveness and efficiency

This section will largely rely on desktop analysis that will look at indicators including but not limited to scale of job creation, community assets and services delivered, sectoral spread, spatial spread, spending trends and ratios in relation to key categories (wages, tools and materials, training, programme management etc), timeous transfers to SIPs, timeous of payments to participants and other metrics. For this purpose, the evaluators will have access to the following documents and data:

- i. Programme's Concept document,
- ii. Programme Agreements Signed between the IDC and DTIC
- iii. Application documents from the respective SIPs
- iv. Submissions to the Investment Committee
- v. Grant Agreements
- vi. Performance reports,
- vii. Impact Study 2023
- viii. Baseline Report from SIPs participating in SEF round 2
- ix. Close Out Reports from SEF Round 2
- x. Any existing monitoring and evaluation results.

3.3 Programme Impacts:

3.3.1 Impact on Participants

Impacts on participants include the following:

3.3.2 Impact on poverty from incomes earned

There is adequate literature on the poverty impact on increased income for people who are poor. Such income is typically spent on food and other basic needs. While these impacts matter, and participants are sure to highlight them, and while the evaluation should capture these where they arise, there is a high level of policy consensus on these effects and they are not the main purpose of this evaluation, which is more focused on the added value of participation in work for participants.

Examples of questions to explore:

- Are participants experiencing improved health and nutrition?
- Are participants experiencing improved quality of life?

3.3.3 Psycho-social impacts from participation in work

There is adequate international literature on the psycho-social impacts of unemployment particularly long-term unemployment. These include depression, loss of self-esteem, social isolation, health impacts, substance abuse, anti-social behaviors such as participation in gangs as a proxy for inclusion, and many more. A key question for evaluation is whether participation in work in SSE programmes contributes to mitigating these psycho-social impacts. While certainly, some of these impacts are linked to having incomes, and it can be hard to separate the income effects from non-income effects, the literature does establish that many of the psycho-social impacts of unemployment apply even where forms of social protection for the unemployed are strong i.e. where income is excluded. The evaluation will consider these issues in an integrated way – but will try where possible to differentiate these issues also.

3.3.4 Impacts on capabilities and skills

Participation in work is associated with the development of a range of skills and capabilities that are relevant both to social functioning and to productivity in the workplace. These include teamwork, accountability, time management, task management, access to networks, access to information, leadership skills, sense of agency, confidence beyond the workplace, and many more. Certainly, some such skills may be formal, whether through formal skills training or on the job training. But many of these are tacit skills. In the South African labour market, employers in the private sector often complain that the reason they do not want to employ people who have never worked before (or are long-term unemployed) is that they lack (or have lost) these tacit skills of work and there are high costs associated with developing them. To what extent do participants in SEF programmes acquire skills and capabilities – formal or tacit relevant to their social functioning and/or to the world of work as a result of their participation?

3.3.5 Impacts on participants of participation in work that serves the common good

A unique feature of SEF programmes is that the work must serve the common good. What difference (if any) does it make to participants that the work undertaken is meaningful to their community? How does this impact on their experience of work/ attitude to the work?

3.3.6 Impacts on social inclusion

While this may be a cross-cutting element derived from and informed by other dimensions above, a prism of analysis is the question of how participation in work impacts on social engagement, participation and sense of belonging for participants.

3.3.7 Impacts on complementary forms of social and economic participation

Part of the rationale for the part-time model is that it does not crowd out other livelihood activities and that by providing support 'scaffolding', it enables a range of complementary forms of social and economic activity, including work search activity, casual employment, early-stage entrepreneurial activity, skilling, and education. For many caregivers, part-time work is accessible in a way that full time work may not be. The evaluation will explore these issues:

- What activities are participants engaged in outside of the programme?
- How has this changed since they joined the programme?
- What possibilities do they see in this regard?
- Are there examples of how design features/interventions of SEF programmes at the level of the SIPs or their partners have enhanced these outcomes and with what lessons?

3.3.8 Impacts on pathways to employment of participants and/or entrepreneurial opportunities

Part of the rationale for the social employment fund model is that it provides for skill acquisition by participants that will enable absorption of participants into sustainable employment or income generating enterprises. The evaluation will explore these issues:

- What are the other potential pathways into livelihood or other activities exist at the end of the work programme for participants?
- What activities are SIPs engaged in to promote absorption of participants into sustainable employment or establishment of enterprises by participants?
- The effectiveness of activities aimed at the promotion of absorption of participants into sustainable employment or establishment of enterprises by participants.
- Tracer Study of participants who have exited the programme.

3.3.9 Impact of social, economic and/or environmental social value creation

The SIPs contribute to work for the common good in a wide variety of ways. Some of this can be aggregated and analysed from the reporting system (refer to Annexure A). However, the evaluation will also include a more qualitative assessment of the contribution to 'the common good' arising from the work undertaken, organized in relation to the key sectors of work covered. Evaluation Proposals will motivate the methodology for this element.

3.3.10 Impacts on organizational development and resilience of SIPs and their partners in community-based organisations

This section of the evaluation will aim to answer inter alia the following questions:

- To what extent has participation in the SEF enhanced/undermined organizational development and resilience in the SIPs, and in either case, in what respects has it done so and how

- To what extent has participation in the SEF through partnership with a SIP enhanced/undermined the organisational development and resilience of community-based organisations – from the perspective both of the SIP and the CBO?
- What have been key lessons – ‘pain-points’ and positive outcomes – from the partnering process?
- Have there been any secondary effects on organizational depth, outreach and/or engagement at community level – in or beyond its direct partners - arising from the SEF programme?
